Most Scientists regard the new streamlined peer review process "Quite an Improvement"

Peer Review is a process that journals use to ensure the articles they publish represent the best scholarship currently available. When an article is submitted to a peer reviewed journal, the editors send it out to other scholars in the same field (the author's peers) to get their opinion on the quality of the scholarship, its relevance to the field, its appropriateness for the journal, etc.

The presence of several of the following traits often indicates that an article is peer-reviewed:

A lot of citations: these may appear in-text, and/or as footnotes, endnotes, works cited, reference list, bibliography

An Abstract (brief description of the article)

The organization of the article into discrete sections such as Methodology, Results, and Conclusion

Charts, tables, or graphs
Complex, formal language that is specific to the field

Notes indicating when article was submitted and when it was accepted
